

STATIONERY

A STEADY STREAM
of stationery and office supplies flows from the store to our customers, and another stream replenishes the stock. This is kept up to a condition where betterment is impossible.

STATIONERY
from the best manufacturers in each line fills our shelves, and little money will transfer the ownership. The proof of the value is in the quality.

Bent Her Double.

"I knew no one for four weeks, when I was sick with typhoid and kidney trouble," writes Mrs. Annie Hunter of Pittsburg, Pa., "and when I got better, although I had one of the best doctors I could get, I was bent double and had to rest my hands on my knees when I walked. From this terrible affliction I was rescued by Electric Bitters, which restored my health and strength, and now I can walk as straight as ever. They are simply wonderful." Guaranteed to cure stomach, liver and kidney disorders. At the Red Cross Pharmacy and Parlor Drug Store. Price 50c.

NOTICE TO TAX-PAYERS.

City Treasurer's Office, Barre, Vt., June 30th, 1905.

All tax-payers of the City of Barre are hereby notified that the City Council of this City have this day placed the tax bill for the year 1905 in my hands for collection, and are further notified that said taxes must be paid at this office on or before the 10th day of August, 1905. If not paid on or before that date there will be added to the tax bill five per cent, eight per cent collection fees, ten cents for the warrant, and 50 cents officer's fees for collection.

Remember, August 10th, 1905, is the last date that you can pay your taxes this year without the additions above enumerated.

James Mackay, City Treasurer.

Notice.

We shall be at the store of Smith & Gummings on the 5th and 20th of each month to collect bills due us. Please call and settle.

A DOG IN A MANGER

(Original.)

While spending a few weeks at a fishing village on the Atlantic coast I made the acquaintance of one of the villagers, with whom I used to sit on the dunes and chat. One afternoon a young fisherman came in from off the water, and as he passed up the beach, seeing my companion, his face lighted up with pleasure, and they exchanged a few words cordially.

"He seems to like you," I remarked after the young man had gone.

"Well, yes," responded my companion. "I did him a favor once, but it was nothing more than a duty."

I pressed him for the story, and he gave it.

"My friend Cap'n Joe Mulford when he died asked me to look after his little girl Molly. About the time Molly grew to be a woman she met with the two greatest misfortunes that can happen to a girl—she lost her mother and she got mixed up in a love affair with a man that was no good—that is, he was in love with her, and she, not being in love with any one else at the time, listened to him. Then along comes John Ruddock, a fisherman from down the coast, and settles here, looking for better fishing ground than what he'd been trying. John's son Paul was then twenty-three years old and as likely a young fellow as one would find anywhere. As soon as Molly Mulford sees him she falls in love in earnest, and that leaves the other fellow, Rufe Scott, out in the cold.

"Scott acted very ugly. He didn't trouble Molly much, nor did he trouble Ruddock, for he wasn't. He just took it out in sulking whenever he met either of them. It struck me that if I were Paul I wouldn't like to meet him out alone in the dark unarmed. But time went on, and Scott didn't do anything to show how he felt except by his looks, which were plain enough.

"One day a sudden squall came up, and a little while after it had blown over Molly Mulford came to me white as a sheet and says:

"Uncle Phil—she called me uncle, though I was no relation—Uncle Phil, she said, 'Paul Ruddock's boat has been blown over by the squall and sunk!'

"I ran into the house, grabbed my glass and, going to the beach, only a few hundred yards away, brought the glass to bear on the ocean. I could make out a man nearly two miles out swimming for his life. I watched him for a minute or two and made up my mind that he was laboring hard and would never get to the shore unless some one helped him. Tossing the glass to Molly, I ran down to the shore, where a lifeboat was kept. The only person I met was Rufe Scott. I told him of Paul Ruddock's fix and asked him to help me get the boat beyond the breakers. He hesitated a moment, but couldn't stand the look I gave him, and, taking hold of the boat, together we got her nose down into the surf.

"Get in," I said. "I'll shove her out."

"This meant for him to go with me. He was about to make some ugly reply, refusing to do so, when he caught sight of Molly coming. Then he got into the bow and took up an oar. Watching his chance to run the boat out when the waves came in lower, I jumped in at the stern, seized my oar, and together we pulled beyond the foam into deep water.

"Rufe being for'd and I aft, it wasn't necessary for him to pull as hard as I. But I noticed that he was doing good work, which relieved my mind, for I was afraid he would shirk. But I soon found by looking ahead that the scoundrel was pulling me around. Indeed, Rufe having the port oar, I could look over my left shoulder and see Paul—that is, whenever he rode the crest of a wave. I stopped rowing, turned around, stood up and, raising my oar, said:

"You miserable dog, if you do that again I'll brain you and throw your carcass overboard!" Then I sat down and kept my eye on the stern of the boat and Molly at the same time, keeping the two in line. Then suddenly Rufe stopped rowing. I turned on him again, and he had his oar up, ready to fight.

"I haven't any call to help Paul Ruddock, and I won't. That's all there is about it."

"You won't, eh?"

"I dropped my oar, caught him on my arm, got at him, and before he could get a grip on me tumbled him overboard."

"There," I said. "Swim back to the girl you're trying to get even with."

"Heading the boat toward Paul, I took both oars and pulled ahead, making a big spurt. Hurling my face toward Rufe, I saw him swim for a point below Molly, and it was evident he didn't want to meet her. She was too intent to see whether I would succeed or not to notice him, and, landing a quarter of a mile away from her, he sunk up the beach and disappeared behind a dam. That's the last he was ever seen in the town. He knew well enough that it would not be best to show his face there after the story I would tell.

"I reached Paul when he was pretty well tuckered out, got him into the boat and pulled him ashore, Molly helping me when I beached the boat and happy at seeing her lover alive, though we needed to get him home and wrap him in hot blankets. He soon righted and married Molly the following autumn."

"And the man who just came in," I asked, "is Paul Ruddock?"

"That's right. I could have anything in the world he's got except his wife."

T. EDWARD MILLS.

Tying a Parcel.

In doing up a heavy parcel the string when it is put about, should always be knotted into every cross strand it passes. Then if the cord breaks there is no danger of the bundle falling to pieces or unwrapping, for the many knots will hold it, except where in the one place it gave.

Air and Sunshine.

Among the beggar children of southern Italy there is rarely one who looks ill fed. Though food is scarce, the sunshine and their life in the open air do much toward nourishing their bodies.

Rautin's Theory.

In the sixteenth century Jean Rautin preached that "man, composed of clay, is silent and ponderous, but woman gives evidence of her osseous origin by the rattle she keeps up."

A Japanese Custom.

When the father of a Japanese family begins a journey of any length, the raised part of his room will be made sacred to his memory during his temporary absence. His family will gather in front of it and think of him, expressing their devotion and love in words and gifts in kind.

Sulphur.

"Sulphur, which is a nuisance and an impudent adulterant among the metals," says the American Machinist, "still has a way of keeping itself uncontaminated. American producers of sulphur offer it 99.9 per cent pure."

A Once Buried Church.

At Soules, in Gascony, a cross was discovered projecting above the sands. Further investigation showed that it was attached to a steeple, and later a well preserved church of the thirteenth century was excavated. The church is now in use.

Amalite
ROOFING

Sometimes an article is made so good that folks wonder how it can be sold at the price. That's the trouble with AMALITE; it seems almost too cheap. For a wind, rain and weather proof roof covering that will not crack, creep or buckle, rust or rot, there is nothing to compare with it. Anyone can lay AMALITE. Sample free on request.
